Within hours, the French government ordered both the military and cultural attachés of the Syrian Embassy to leave France in two days, and announced the recall of the French ambassador to Damascus, Henri Servant. The Syrians were Commandant Nassan Ali, a naval officer, and Michail Kassouha, the cultural affairs third

In announcing the explusion or-der, the French did not directly accuse the two Syrians of complici-ty in the bombing, for which no group had claimed responsibility. The car used in the Thursday bombing was a German-made Opel with Austrian license plates which police established had been rented in Vienna. It was parked about midnight outside a building on the Rue Marbeuf, which houses the Paris bureau of Al Watan al Arabi (the Arab Nation), a Baghdad-owned pro-Iraqi weekly. An estimated 50 pounds of explosives was packed in the car, timed to go off at 9:02 a.m., when the street was crowded with cars and pedes-

A Beirut newspaper under the same ownership as Al Watan al Arabi was demolished in November, 1976, after Syrian troops entered Lebanon.

Although there seems to be little doubt that the Paris bombing is part of the bitter Syrian-Iraqi conflict, there are other ramifications that concern the French. On Wednesday night, French televi-sion carried a documentary on the assassination on Sept. 4 in Beirut of the French ambassador to Lebanon, Louis Delamare, which laid the blame for the killing on Syrian secret agents.

Soldiers Clash With Settlers in Sinai Town

By Marcus Eliason

YAMIT, Israeli-Occupied Sinai - Israeli troops climbed ladders to storm an apartment block in Yam-it Thursday, and in a short battle ousted more Jewish squatters resisting the return of the desert territory to Egypt next Sunday.

The squatters fought back with burning tires, fistfuls of sand and poles, with which they tried to knock down the scaling ladders. Men struggled with the helmeted. unarmed soldiers while wept and screamed

Firemen sprayed the Jewish proesters with jets of foam and seawater while a crane lowered a cage onto the roof to remove some of the 300 persons from a two-story building in the settlement.

The army now has ejected about half of the 2,000 settlers and squatters who defied the government's order to evacuate the settlements that israel established after captured the Sinai Peninsula from Egypt in the 1967 war. Israel began withdrawing from the Sinai in 1979, shortly after the signing of the Camp David peace treaty with Egypt.

Although the army said that there were no casualties, it was the most bitter clash so far in two days of struggle for Yamit and the most violent confrontation in memory between Israeli troops and Israeli

As troops and squatters battled on the roofs of the 200-yard-long apartment block, bulldozers coninued to tear down the town at the rate of a house every 15 min-

The action began with a whistle blast at 7:40 a.m. Troops charged the building and put up ladders. The squatters pelted them with sand and plastic cans, shoved at the ladders and pushed down on the heads of the ascending soldiers. Resisters were wrestled to the ground and their hands tied with cord. At 7:50 a.m., two officers fired a long burst of automatic. fire into the air. Hebneted female soldiers followed the first wave of troops onto the roofs to deal with female squatters.

Over a public address system, a leader of the resisters kept up a constant flow of abuse and dis-traught appeals to the soldiers. "Soldiers, how can you do this?" he said. "The whole of Zionism is going up in flames."

Despite the emotions, both sides appeared reluctant to do each other physical harm. The squatters did not throw hard objects at the troops, and the soldiers tried to reason with the resisters as they took them down the ladders. Soldiers in teams of five carried many of the resisters to buses that took them across the border into Israel. One bearded religious scholar read his prayer book as he was lifted

Twenty minutes after the first onslaught, squatters were being taken out of the building in a steady flow. By 8:30 a.m., they sword in a line, their hands tred, and with tear-choked voices sang the Israeli national anthem. Two An elderly man sounded the shofar, the ram's born trumpet blown on solomn occasions, and the battle was over.

A brigadier general said that the resistance was "a little more than reasonable, and we had to use force in a very controlled, respon-sible way to take over the roof."

During the night, several dozen extremists living in the Yamit hotel were evacuated quietly but left a dozen others barricaded in a bomb shelter. The extremists have said that they will surrender on Sunday, and have abandoned their threat to commit suicide.

He added: "The soldiers did a beautiful job considering that they were up against Israeli civilians."

WASHINGTON - Foreign Sec-

The foreign secretary made clear his government's view that the dispute stems from "aggression by Argentina and the unlawful invasion of the Falkland Islands."

She said Gen, Galtieri's visit to the islands does not affect British sovereignty over them. "Nothing General Galtrieri can do about visiting the islands today can alter the fact that they have British sovereignty," she said.

Meeting with Haig

Mr. Pym flew to Washington on a supersonic Concorde and went directly to the State Department for a working lunch with Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., whom he nraised for making "he-roic efforts" to find a peaceful solution to the crisis.

Entering the State Department for his meeting with Mr. Haig, Mr. Pym said: "We know the difficulties, the seriousness of the prob-lem. We will do our best to see if we can make some progress. After lunch, Mr. Pym was beading to Capitol Hill for a meeting with members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. A British Embassy source, who asked not to be identified, said the committee was "another important source of opinion and decisionmaking in the American system" and the British believed that it was important to discuss their proposals with the panel.

Mr. Pym is expected to meet with President Reagan at the White House on Friday before returning to London later in the day.

Palestinian Guerrillas Rule Out Quick Retaliation for Israeli Raid

By Edward Cody

Washington Pau Service BEIRUT — Palestinian guerrilla leaders, overriding objections from their militant factions, have decided against any swift retaliation for the Israeli air raid Wednesday on commando positions in Lebanon, Palestinian and other Arab sources said Thursday.

The policy of restraint provides a new test of the leadership of Yasser Arafat, head of the Palestine Liberation Organization, and of his ability to control radical PLO factions. Those factions have been chafing for nine months un-der a U.S.-engineered cease-fire and were outraged by the Israeli bombing and rocketing that killed more than 20 persons.

Mr. Arafat reportedly has con-cluded that the attack, having in-flicted relatively little military damage, can serve a useful pobtical purpose if the PLO does not respond. He is said to believe that one goal of the attack might have been to provoke the guerrillas into giving Israel a reason for more extensive attacks and perhaps an in-vasion of southern Lebanon.

'An Ambush'

Mr. Arafat told an overnight meeting of the PLO leadership that the two-hour Israeli raid was "an ambush" and that the guerrilla movement should be smart enough not to walk into it, according to officials at the lengthy session. But PLO sources said Mr.

Arafat and his more militant colleagues agreed that any further Is-raeli attacks would bring immediate retaliation.

Palestinian artillery, concentrated in the hills north of Nabatiyeh in southern Lebanon, thus remained silent, United Nations observers reported. But fear of a Palestinian reprisal sent some Jewish settlers in northern Israel into bomb shelters, according to news agency reports.

The Palestinians' 122mm and 130mm artillery pieces, along with truck-mounted rocket launchers, have the range to shell villages in northern Israel; they constitute the guerrillas' chief threat of retalia-

But Palestinian and Syrian anti-aircraft batteries opened fire in Beirut and southern Lebanon sev-eral times Thursday as Israeli jets flew over, apparently on recon-naissance missions. Israeli military planes regularly violate Lebanese airspace, but do not always draw anti-aircraft fire.

U.S. Sees Violation

"The cease-fire has clearly been violated," Mr. Dillon said later. We deplore cease-fire violations wherever and whenever they oc-cur." He expressed hope the ceasefire could remain in force. In Washington, the State Department issued a similarly worded statement, saying it deplored all cease-fire violations, including both "violence against Israelis and the Israeli air strikes into Leba-Israeli officials said the raid was in retaliation for the killing of an Israeli soldier and the wounding of

After six hours of debate, the 440 delegates at the party national congress here voted by about 2 to 1, with a show of hands, to reject as a basis for discussion a left-wing motion demanding that Bonn renounce the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's 1979 decisions on missile deployment and arms control. In a separate vote, delegates voted by about 65 percent to 35 percent in favor of the proposal endorsed by Mr. Schmidt and the party leadership supporting the NATO strategy, but postponing a final decision on missile deployment until late next year.

Before the key votes, Mr. Schmidt warned delegates that the moratorium, if accepted, would provoke "a grave domestic political crisis and shake the NATO alli-

"It would destroy the [Geneva arms limitation] talks and it could increase the probability of a war on this Earth," Mr. Schmidt said. He was booed by some delegates and by spectators at the congress, but retorted sharply that "reason

The main contender for Mr. Suslov's joh had been Konstantin U. Chernenko, 70, a close Brezhnev associate for more than 30 years and head of his office who was elected to the Polithuro less than four years ago.

By relinquishing his KGB position and moving into the powerful secretariat of the Central Committee, Mr. Andropov appears to have taken a major step toward gaining one of the key positions in the line of succession. It has been widely believed here that the nation's top police official cannot aspire to becoming a key player in the party hierarchy. While members of the Kremlin audience were visibly relieved to see Mr. Brezhnev on the platform, it was apparent that he has oot fully recovered from what was described as a mild stroke suffered March 25.

Speech Affected

Soviet officials close to some leading personalities said Mr. Bre-zhnev's speech has been affected by the illness and that it is unlikely that he will not make any public speeches for months.

During the ceremony, his face seemed immobile. Except of a few occasions when his colleagues ex-changed a few words with him, he sat motionless throughout Mr. Andropov's speech. Outside the main half and out of camera range, he was seen being helped in climbing a few steps.

Mr. Chernenko, who was sitting next to Mr. Brezhnev, appeared nervous during the ceremony.

Yet the Soviet leader, in what a Western diplomat described as a gallant effort," did oot depart immediately after the formal ceremonies but remained in the hall for a concert.

Mr. Brezhnev's authority remains unchallenged, although he may have to reduce his official and ceremonial activities in the coming

According to these analysts, all factions within the Politburo and the secretariat have vested interests in seeing Mr. Brezhnev remain in power. Missing from Thursday's cele hrations was Andrei Kirilenko 75 Politburo member in charge of industry. He is reported to be grave-ly ill with little chances of recovery. Also missing was Arvid Pelshe at 83 the oldest member of the ruling body.

The reported emergence of Mr. Andropov as a senior party figure suggests that Mr. Brezhnev's policies are likely to continue. In Thursday's speech, his first major policy address, Mr. Andropov largely reiterated Soviet positions on domestic and foreign issues. Although his long association with the KGB is seen here as something of a stigma, he is also viewed as a modern politician with liberal views and a good education. He has never visited a Western country and is largely unknown to Westerners. Prior to serving in the KGB, Mr. Andropov held various regional party posts, worked in the Foreign Ministry and served as Soviet ambassador to Hungary during the 1956 rebellion there.

Solidarity Advisers Invited to Party Conference

By John Darnton New York Tunes Service WARSAW - Nine advisers and lawyers for the Solidarity union organizatioo who are not in detention bave been invited to join an officially sponsored conference Friday and Saturday on the future of the trade unioo movement. The conference is believed to have the backing of several moder-ate members of the Communist Party's Polithuro, and is regarded by some observers as the first significant move by the authorities to establish some kind of dialogue with people close to the suspended unioo.

The prospect that any kind of understanding will emerge from the conference is diminished, however, because most of the Solidarity experts have decided oot to attend. They met as a group and decided that only two or three would participate and that they would attend as individuals, not as representatives of the union.

Moderate Faction

In the past, there have been reports of secret meetings between representatives of the martial law government headed by Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski and Solidarity figures, including occasional ses-sions between the minister for trade unioo affairs, Stanislaw Closek, and Lech Walesa, Solidarity's interned chairman. But these that would allow the government have been individual meetings, more for establishing some kind of contact than anything else, and have not led to negotiations or serious, concerted exchanges of

The conference to be held in a small town about 15 miles (24 kilometers) north of Warsaw, is sponsored by the Institute of Basic Problems of Marxism-Leninism, an advisory group to the Central Committee. The director of the institute, Jerzy Wiatr, is associated with the moderate faction of the party.

The moderates are engaged in a power struggle with a hard-line faction, which draws ideological support from a competing organi-zation, the Higher School of Social Sciences of the Central Committee. The hard-liners advocate liquidating Solidarity and purging liberals from all institutions of power to ensure orthodox party control. The moderates are pressing instead for some kind of national reconciliation with the Catholic Church and for a revived but carefully controlled Solidarity.

The Solidarity advisers invited to the conference are nervous about talking with anyone in au-thority at a time when the union's elected leadership is locked in detention centers. Some of them also fear that the conference may turn out to be a subterfuge, an event

The reaction mirrors a general confusion among Solidarity sup-porters and members about what the government is up to. Some fear that the government is about to move to make the union illegal, and they point to heavy attacks in the press as an indication of this. Others hope for some kind of eventual compromise and back this with rumors that the government will soon release hundreds of detained persons as a gesture of good faith.

Union Defended

The optimists found it encouraging that, for the first time since martial law was imposed Dec. 13, the tightly controlled press allowed one article defending Solidarity to appear this week. The letter by Wojciech Gilewski, a Solidarity action of the best detained was tivist who had been detained, was printed in Zycie Warszawy, a major Warsaw daily.

Mr. Gilewski criticized the government's guidelines for a national debate on the future shape of the unions. He said that it was unacceptable for the government to limit a union's foreign contacts and unrealistic to try to legalize a ban on "political" strikes.

Instead, he suggested, the law should hold up penal charges for union leaders who stray into politics. While the letter did not direct ly take issue point-by-point with the government's attacks on Solidarity, Mr. Gilewski ended it by saying that "slandering the entire activities of Solidarity is damaging to its members."

U.S. High Court Backs Moon Sect : Page 1 In Test Case of First Amendment

WASHINGTON - In a victory for the Rev. Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church, the Supreme Court has ruled unconstitutional a Minnesota law aimed at regulating religious sects that raise most of their money through solicitations of public donations.

The 1978 Minnesota law had required religious groups that received 50 percent or less of their contributions from members to register with the state and to file reports on their income and fund raising. By a 5-4 vote, the court de-cided Wednesday that the provision violated the First Amendment ban against laws "respecting an es-tablishment of religion."

At the Lebanese Border

The Israeli government, eyeing the Palestine Liberation Organization buildup and the Syrian presence in Lebanon, had heen looking for an occasion to hit, and it would bave been extraordinary if it had not found one. In the event, the occasion was provided by the killing of two Israelis abroad - a diplomat shot in Paris and a soldier whose jeep was blown up in a section of southern Lebanon in effect occupied by Israel.

The Israeli Air Force responded, as usual hitting some military targets and some civilians. As night fell, the question was whether Israel would consider that it had adequately shown its steel, and whether the PLO and perhaps Syria would feel compelled to retaliate. The United States was urging restraint.

This is a difficult moment for Israel. It is uprooting, in great pain, thousands of its settlers and preparing to yield up the last slice of Sinai hy midnight on Sunday for a peace with Egypt whose content must remain uncertain at best for a very long time. In the West Bank and Gaza it faces a Palestinian nationalist movement that it cannot conceivably succeed in suppressing; its very effort strains its relations with numerous countries. even friends such as the United States, Across the Lebanese border sits a PLO army in a position and perhaps of a mind to do considerable harm. Syria's forces in Lebanon are also substantial and dangerous.

In these circumstances, it is not surprising that the Israeli government should be in a frightened, prickly and somewhat reckless mood and that it should be demanding from both Egypt and the United States assurances that they mean to stick to their commitments to Israel. The Israeli military action on Wednesday, a taste of the Begin government's dream of breaking the back of the PLO's armed forces, can be considered as a test of Egyptian and American constancy.

So this is not the moment for sermons to Israel. It is a moment for respect for Israel's anguish - and for mourning the latest victims of Israeli-Palestinian hostility. It is a moment to hope that the cease-fire across the Lebanese border holds.

Reading the Rio Pact

Argentina has invoked the wrong treaty at the wrong time to promote the illusion that all Latin American nations support its seizure of the Falklands.

They do not, and some that do serve only their own territorial ambitions.

By appealing to the Rio Pact against intrusion into the hemisphere, the generals in Buenos Aires choose the semblance of diplomacy over the real thing.

Their turn to the Organization of American States can only produce a useless confrontation of foreign ministers next week. The United States pointedly abstained from approving the meeting; the junta would he foolish to ignore that signal. Argentina's resistance to compromise can only increase the pressures for the Reagan administration to side more openly with Britain.

That partisanship would not just be an ex-pression of cultural affinity. Americans neither know nor care very much about who has the better claim to those long-disputed islands. But they are well aware that 1,800 Falklanders should not be absorbed into a military dictatorship through a coup de main that affronts all international norms. In fact, those norms are spelled out in the very first article of the treaty that Argentina would invoke against Britain. The Reciprocal Assistance (Rio) Pact of 1947 opens with the declaration that 19 Western Hemisphere nations "condemn war and undertake in their international relations not to resort to the threat or use of force in any manner inconsistent with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations or of this treaty.

Having violated that commitment, Argentina cheekily accuses Britain of attacking an American republic, in violation of Article 6. The impudence is compounded by crude hints that Buenos Aires will rely on Soviet aid to sustain its aggression. For the main purpose of the Rio Pact was to shield the hemisphere against Soviet intrusion.

A vague sense of bemispheric solidarity predictably produced 18 votes for convening a ministers' conference. Only Colombia and Trinidad joined the United States in abstaining. But support for Argentina is tepid, except for such notable exceptions as Venezuela and Guatemala, which have standing territorial claims in Guyana and Belize concerning frontiers fixed by Britain.

The Reagan administration is right to try to sidetrack this ploy and to keep the Royal Navy treading water while new British proposals are considered. This war is better threatened than fought, and if it must be fought, better later than sooner.

If the threat of it has still not registered in Buenos Aires, one good way to give diplomacy a further chance will be for the United States to rebut this Argentine challenge with a more pronounced tilt toward Britain.

This dispute does not represent a new colonial thrust by a European power into the Western Hemisphere. Nor is it a Soviet challenge, except as Argentina's maneuvers facilitate Moscow's meddling. The Rio nations should stand by their first principle and join the United Nations in condemning Argentina's resort to force.

Other Opinion

After Israel's Raid in Lebanon

The aggression has many aims, including embarrassment of Egypt at this critical stage, aggravating tension in Lebanon and exercising a sort of hegemony over the area, so as to convince the world community that any settlement which is not acceptable to Israel can never see the light. It is not expected that Lehanon's complaint to the Security Council will be of any avail. It is likely that Israeli aggressions will increase after withdrawal from Sinai. There is no alternative for the Arabs but to rely on self-defense.

the Jewish character and about the capacity of Jews for physical labor. Many came from Oriental countries (they are perhaps a majority now), and the myth was destroyed that Israel's problem among Arabs was its Western, modern character in an area swamped in tradition. When the Israelis become more Levantine, more integrated with the climate and geography — so went the conventional wisdom — they and the Arabs will get along better. The opposite happened. It is the people who brought their memories from Moslem lands who have the most strident, emotional hostility to Arabs.

When a new generation rises went another myth — it will have learned to live without complexes in the neighborhood. And then when Israel is more securely armed, argued Henry Kissinger, it will be more generous. But the expanded armaments and the sense of power haven't di-minished the fear; they have transformed it so that now when Arabs come to fear Israel, many Israelis seem to fear peace.

"Our country is shrinking," complained one early Zionist about the impending Sinai withdrawal, although he is a man of great gentleness with little taste for acquisition.

A young woman, a political critic of the harsh policies of Prime Minister Begin, said, "We are giving away the land for nothing." For peace? "It's only a promise," she said. "How do we know?" Peace can never be more than a promise. It isn't an object.

There are two broad strains in Israeli opinion now. They overlap, not only between political and so-cial groups but even within indi-viduals. One yearns for peace and shrinks from the endless prospect of violence that seems to lie ahead. The other suspects peace as a trap, the ultimate risk that can only be parried with land and the readioess to strike hard.

The degradation of being an occapying power imposing its will on unarmed civilians is felt in Isra-el, but so is the insidious sense of natural superiority bred by suc-cess and privilege.

Jerusalem's Mayor Teddy Kol-

lek, one of the few who has fre-quent social contacts with Arabs and who is a blunt, highly vocal critic of occupation policy, said. "But the Arabs don't help either. When did an Arah speak out against an act of terrorism?"

He thinks a majority of Israelis would still accept a compromise with Palestinians, as they have ac-cepted — however warily — the withdrawal from Egypt's tetritory, in return for a promise of peace.

Bot time is running out.

Kollek quotes the founding prime minister, David Ben-Gurion, in retirement, telling a Pales-tinian several years after the 1967 war, "You'd better hurry. The Isracli appetite will grow." Now new myths are taking hold myths of super strength, myths of justification based ou ancient history. It is a tragedy of the deadly Arab-Israeli embrace that the partoers never manage to discard their myths and reach an awareness of myths and reach an awareness of realities at the same time.

The months ahead are going to be crucial. If, as Egypt's government hopes, the return of Siaai leads other Arab countries to conclude that negotiation is the one way to success, there is still a chance of exemptal settlement.

way to success, there is still a chance of eventual settlement. However, if the impasse persists much longer, the chance will be lost again until another tragedy brings drastic change.

A new period is opening in the Middle East. Each element affects the others. Jordan is budging, but it is afraid to join Egypt's isolation. The PLO's Yasser Arafat is worried. The Iraq-Iran war and Syria's renewed ambitions for preminence are shifting afiguments. eminence are shifting alignments. If another person in the area has the late Anwar Sadar's courage, he must act soon.

Checking One Salvadoran Guerrilla Back to His Words

By Stephen S. Rosenfeld

WASHINGTON — Journalists are sometimes accused of cultivating a guerrilla chic, chasing after guerrillas and giving them an easy platform that we deny to the authorities they wish to boot from power. This is the wrong rap. The trouble is oot that we chase after guerrillas but that we don't chase after them hard enough.

We pursue them to their mountain re-doubts but not to their intellectual and politdoubts but not to their intellectual and political roots. To do so is important because, notwithstanding the common myth that guerrillas are earthy folk springing from the soil of the people, their leaders customarily cross over from the educated or privileged middle class. They are talkative types, and long before they take up guns they are making statements or being spritten up in public ing statements or being written up in publications that many of us fail to read.

I write this in the grip of a rich 40-page essay, "Enemy Colleagues: A Reading of the Salvador Tragedy," by a Mexican writer and social critic, Gabriel Zaid, Appearing in the writter issue of the democratic socialist quart winter issue of the democratic socialist quar-terly Dissent, it mines a lode of material that has appeared in the Mexican press and in some guerrilla sheets but has not been digested in either journalistic or, I gather, offi-cial analysis in the United States.

Three of Zaid's points merit reflection: Joaquio Villalobos, one of five guerrilla leaders who has asked President Reagan for oegotiations, had a disagreement with a col-league oamed Roque Dalton, a poet, in 1975. Dalton was oo innocent: He had pooh-poohed taking a "lily-white intellectual" approach to the requirements of the Cu-ban revolution. He was, in another guerrilla group's words, "ruthlessly murdered" by Villalobos. Later, still another guerrilla leader, a friend of the victim, acknowledged he had found it "very hard" thereafter to do business with the killer; "But the needs of our people's struggle require it. The contra-our people's struggle require it. The contra-dictions remain secondary.

• The reformist officers' coup of Oct. 15, 1979, was a watershed. The local Communist Party, whose emphasis on the political road had cost it the allegiance of militants, felt that the coup "initiated a process of change that will allow the country to emerge from the profound political, economic and social crisis into which it has been plunged social crists into which it has been punged during 50 years of military governments." The Peoples' Revolutionary Army, for one, overcame its misgivings and quickly threw in with the "reformists and progressives."

 The same Villalobos, however, at once undertook military operations against the coup. "Why did we proceed in this manner? coup. "Why did we proceed in this manner? Because the situation was a guise of imperialism to deceive the Salvadoran people. To have united behind [the coup] would have signaled a defeat — passing, if you like, but defeat nonetheless — of a revolutionary alternative... The necessary risks had to be taken, beginning with the loss of our carres." In other words, Villalobos, although he avered with the coup's program, acted to he agreed with the coup's program, acted to get some blood flowing and pry the demo-cratic left out of its cooperation with the jun-ta because the wrong people were in charge. (Is there an echo in the statement of the guerrillas in Guatemala on the reformist of-licer coup there? "The recent coup d'etat is a farce and a trick that gives the army time to hreathe," they said, resuming fire.)

an egociated settlement. The guerrillas would not accept even a junta with a program they favored in 1979. They undercut the inclination of their own political associates to favor that junta. Zaid suggests that Villalobos is one guerrilla who is not about to accept any leadership be does oot control, since "his position is vulnerable: At any moment his comrades could liquidate him politically, exposing him as Roque Dalton's assassin

Being far from a rightist zealot. Zaid would bring pressure to bear on both army and opposition to stop tolerating "munderers" within their ranks. He sees the purging — by amnesty and exile, not by liquidation or trial - of offenders in the army and police as the indispensable first step, since in terms of numbers of innocent deaths they bear the main responsibility.

Zaid would offer the guerrillas, too, amnesty and exile, seek to disconnect the political opposition from those who rejected the offer, and proceed to internationally su-pervised elections. His views throw cold water on any easy prospect of negotiations.

Defense in Europe: Growing Economic Strains

Alliance is in deep trouble. The Reagan administration's irresponsible rhetoric about limited ouclear war has fed Europe's fears. to be sure. But Europe's wariness toward Reagan has less to do with military strategy than with his management of the economy. It is the dispute over U.S. economic policies that has shaken the alliance. How the United States controls inflation is of great concern to Europeans. The dollar is the key currency used all over the world to finance trade. For most of the past decade, America financed its external trade deficit by simply creating more credit — IOUs that were worth less and less to whomever held them as U.S. deficits increased and Washington went oo printing money to cover them. High interest rates in America have sparked competitively high rates in Europe. As a result, with investment inhibited, unemployment on the rise and oil highly priced because of an overvalued dollar, the American recession spread across the Atlantic.

Had the drop in U.S. inflation rates been accompanied, as might have been expected, by a fall in interest rates, America would un-doubtedly have embarked on a new, less inflationary period of ex-pansion and helped pull the Western world along with it.

Instead the Reagan administration produced policies that may lead to deficies in the hundreds of billions of dollars over the oext few years. Although the administration denies it, to cover these deficits the choice is either to print money with inflationary abandon, or to borrow oo a scale so immense as to keep interest rates unacceptably high.

To those who would play down the emphasis on high deficits, re-sponse from abroad has been to look at the structure of the U.S. economy over the long term. While it is true that U.S. federal deficits as a percentage of gross national product have been lower than those of Japan or West Germany, which have had lower inflation rates, the savings rates abroad have been higher than those in America. In 1981, Japan's personal savings as a percentage of dispos-able income were about 18 percent, Germany's 13 percent, America's 5 percent. This level of savings is not high enough to support the level of borrowing that Washington will be forced to undertake. The economic strains among Europe, Japan and America are likely to focus on bow to reduce the U.S. deficits. It is at this point that the issue of defense spending will loam large. Upon taking office, the Reagan inistration decided to increase defense spending to about $1.6 trillion through fiscal 1986, 14 percent more than President Carter had promised for the same period. Like President Johnson during the Vietnam buildup, Reagan is unwilling to increase taxes to pay for the big increase in defense spending. Instead be seems prepared to risk large deficits while hoping that

When politicians compare U.S. spending on defense with that of the allies, the pressures to have the allies assume more of the defense burden are likely to increase. The response from Europe is not going to be sympathetic. French Finance Minister Jacques Delors has asked: "How can we defend an alliance with the United States when critics say that American policy is making us hankrupt?"

While America in 1980 spent more per capita on defense than the allies ($644 compared to $437 for Britain, the tiext highest) and 5.5 percent of its GNP (compared with an average for NATO of 3.4 percent, and 0.9 percent for Japan). Europeans claim this is only fair since America plays the controlling role in NATO. When, as they undoubtedly will, the allies balk at paying more for defense in order to belp the United States set its domestic economic bouse in order, the pressure to pull U.S. troops out of Europe will grow. Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger warns: "The Amer-ican people may not wish to bear the burden of necessary defense expenditures if they think some are doing less as we do more." Uotil now, America's quarrels with Europe have largely centered on economic policy, without direct reference to NATO. But so long as Europe depends on the United States for its security, economic policy and military strategy are inextricably linked.

For three decades, from 33 to 50 percent of the U.S. defense budget has been devoted, directly or indi-

Europe. In the 1981 fiscal budget, the cost was reckoned at about $81 billion. Such spending could be met more easily in an expanding economy, but today the United States faces deficits that may rise from $111 billion in 1982 to almost $140 billion by 1985.

rectly, to forces to defend Western

In short, the administration is beavily committed to both a strong defense buildup and increased industrial productivity. But it faces growing deficits, high interest rates and the continuing threat of infla-tion — all of which may impede the economic recovery that the administration hopes for.

Moreover, even if there is an up-turn in the U.S. economy, it is not likely to last without an effective effort to upgrade America's faltering industrial base. "Stagflation" seems to be the order of the day. This year, for the first time since

World War II, the government deficit will probably exceed America's net outlay for new plants and an earlier round of budget cuts made in the fall of 1981 that the president is reluctant to cut defense spending, it will be tempting to poiot out that America can reduce its defense spending while still maintaining a strong posture toward the Soviet Union by demanding that the European countries increase theirs. If they do oot do so, and if the Reagan economic program contin-ues to falter, pressures for America to cut itself loose from Europe and take unilateral action will increase. The debate over the future of the Atlantic Alliance has only begun.

A Budget, Two Old Men and New Thinking

WASHINGTON — The oego-V tiations aimed at producing a budget for the United States gov-ernment for fiscal 1983 have been drama of many dimensions. This is high-stakes economic and politi-cal poker, with the future of an ailing economy and the advantage in the 1982 and perhaps even the 1984 elections at risk. It is also a human struggle between Ronald Reagan and Tip O'Neill.

At first glance these men seem be polar opposites. After 45 years in public office, House Speaker O'Neill is easily caricatured as a bumbling relic of the political past, a ward heeler who threatens harm to the Queen's English every time he puts down his cigar and opens his mouth. Reagan, the movie actor and television host who took up a second career in politics as he was approaching retirement age, is just as easily caricatured as a lightweight charmer with a gift of gab but no talent for sustained leadership.

Each man has come to know that the other's caricature is a lie. O'Neill learned last year that Reagan is tough; Reagan is learning this year that O'Neill can be stubborn about his convictions. In fact, the two men whose agreement is essential if there is to be a compromise on the budget have more in common with each other than either of them does with most of the others involved in the lengthy negotiations. They are of an age: Reagan just past his 71st birthday, O'Neill ap-proaching his 70th. Although they draw different lessons from it, negotiating on their behalf—House Budget Committee Chairman Jim Jones, an Oklahoma Democrat, the White House chief of staff, James A. Baker 3d, and Budget Director David A. Stockman — are products of the pros-perous postwar world, with its overflowing economic and educa-tional benefits. They are, like most of their generation, practical, pragmatic men of affairs, uncomfortable with ideology. They have trouble understanding the inflexibility of their elders. But Reagan and O'Neill are not just stubborn Irishmen. They have convictions, and those convictions were forged a long time ago.

As Churchill could say that he did not "become the King's First Minister in order to preside over the liquidation of the British Empire," so Reagan is certain he did not become president of the Unit-ed States in order to raise taxes. And O'Neill is equally convinced that he did not become Speaker of the House in order to reduce anyone's Social Security.

is a critical moment for them personally and for the parties and branches of government they lead. For O'Neill, a rollback in promised Social Security payments is the first retreat from the promise of decent, dignified retirement which the sainted FDR made the contertions of the New Deal Ful. cornerstone of the New Deal. Ful-filling that promise has kept the Democrats in almost unbroken control of Congress for 50 years. For Reagan, an increase in tax rates contradicts the first principle of the philosophy he has preached since he left the Democratic fold, the belief that the only way to curb

They both understand that this

Only by sustaining that principle, he thinks, can the Republicans hold power on a long-term basis. These two men - so much alike and yet so different - lived through the same historical experience of the Great Depression and came to diametrically opposite conclusions. Reagan sees government as the source, not the solubig government is to slow the torrent of taxes on which it feeds.

and O'Neill is just as convinced that, when all else fails, government must be ready to step in. As Paul Clancy and Shirley Elder say in their biography of the speaker, in O'Neill's part of work-ing-class Cambridge "government was a means of delivering help to people in the oeighborhoods—food, clothing, shelter... O'Neill grew up knowing this as well as he knew his catechism." knew his catechism."

Reagan, on the other hand, worked his way through college at the start of the Depression with a joh as a summer lifeguard, making $20 a week and saving almost all of it. As biographer Bill Boyarsky notes, Reagan said that one reason he could make his own way without government help was that "the out government help was that "the boss paid you out of his pocket in cash. He didn't have to sit down and do a lot of paperwork for So-cial Security and all those things." To ask these men, at this point in their lives, to rethink the lessons of their youth and the principles of a lifetime is asking a lot. And a lot depends on their doing it. 01982. The Washington Post.

Los Angeles Times Service PEKING - China intends to reestablish the post of head of state with the adoption fater this year of a new constitution, according to a. draft of the document presented. Thursday to the Standing Commit-tee of the National People's Con-gress, the country's parliament.

Peng Zhen, deputy chairman of the Constitutional Revision Commission, was quoted as describing the reinstatement of the post of chairman of the People's Republic chairman of the People's Republic of China as the greatest change made in the proposed constitution from that adopted in 1978.

Deng Xiaoping the deputy chairman of the Chinese Communist Party, is by far the leading candidate for the post, but both Mr. Deng who will be 78 this year, and other top officials have said that it would go to a younger man.

Post Abolished in 1959 "Deng is the logical person no one else is as prestigious as he and he might be prevailed upon to serve the state a little longer in this post," a knowledgeable Chinese political observer said Thursday. Alt is not a closed question, however many times Deng has said

Liu Shao-Chi was the last per-son to hold the post until he was arrested by during 1967 the Cul-tural Revolution. He died in prison in 1969, branded a "renegade, traitor and scab" in what is now acknowledged as the "greatest frame-up" in the party's history. The post was then abolished.

Mao Tse-tung, who was chairman of the state as well as of the party until 1959, was the only person to hold the post. He came to view Mr. Liu as a rival for power and the position as a threat to the supremacy of the party.

In recent years, Marshal Ye Jianying 84, chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, has acted as China's head of state for ceremonial purposes as provided in the current constitution, but his advanced age and poor health have limited even that role.

According to an official close to the commission, Mr. Peng ac-knowledged there had been considerable debate over whether to re-establish the post. But, the source added, he said that the Constitutional Revision Commission, after 18 months of discussion with a broad cross section of state officials, party members, social sciPeople's Congress and representatives of civic organizations, decided that "this is the desire of the broad masses, an issue on which a consensus has developed."

Creation of State Council

Many of the most far-reaching constitutional changes, however, will probably come from the strengthening of legislative bodies at all levels, starting with the National People's Congress, and the creation of a Cabinet-like state council under the premier.

Mr. Peng was reported as saying that there would also be a general devolution of political power so that "grassroots levels" have far greater control over both administrative and economic affairs than they do now. One such change will probably strip the rural areas people's communes, established by Mao in the late 1950s, of their gov-erumental authority, leaving them as economic bodies, and bring back the traditional township ad-

Another major change, Mr. Peng said, will be the creation of a central military council, a move that apparently will put China's armed forces under the state rather

Deng Xiaoping

The Chinese news agency account of Mr. Peng's report to the standing committee gave few de-tails of the 140-article document, and full evaluation must wait until the committee has endorsed it for discussion. Further revisions are possible before the constitution is put before the National People's Congress at the end of the year for adoption.

This will be China's fourth constitution since the Communists came to power in 1949, and Mr. Peng said that a great deal of ef-fort had gone into getting it correct

North Korea Alleges More Border Firing

Says South Continued After Battle Ended

TOKYO — North Korea accused South Korean soldiers on Thursday of four provocations by firing across the demilitarized zone Wednesday and early Thursday. The two sides exchanged fire across the zone for four hours Wednesday.

Pyongyang radio alleged that "indiscrees acts of provocation" by the South Koreans took place Thursday along the eastern and western sectors of the 242-kilome-ter (151-mile) DMZ after North Korea protested the initial shooting incident 10 the Joint Armistice Commission's South Korean component.

The radio did not say whether any North Koreans were hurt in the shooting. It warned that the in-cidents were "very serious armed provocations that could lead to a military confrontation between the two sides.

In Scoul, a spokesman for the UN command said North Korea's allegations are being investigated. [South Korea denied Thursday that its troops continued sporadic firing into North Korea following the border firefight, Reuters re-ported from Seoul. A Defense Ministry spokesman said: "As far as we are concerned, there was oo other firing by the North today or yesterday. Therefore, there was no more defensive fire from our side

North Korea said Wednesday that it had suffered some casualties in the initial battle, the first this year and the most serious reported along the zone since Oct. 31,

South Korea contended that the firing began after four North Ko-rean soldiers were "killed or wounded" by one of their own mines while trying to defect to the South along the central sector of the demilitarized zone shortly after

2 a.m. Wednesday.
Pyongyang radio contended that the first incident took place at about 3:10 p.m. that day when South Koreans directed several rounds of automatic weapons fire into the North Korean area across the 4-kilometer-wide wide zone on the eastern sector of the border. This was followed, it said, by three other incidents of shooting.

ARTS/LEISURE American Artists and the Impact of 20th-Century Europe

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — Once upon a time. Europe ama By John Russell land for the visiting American artist. It took forever to get there, hut when you finally got off the boat, life was cheap, the natives were friendly and great art fell from the Happy times! Something of their vibration lingers still in the work done in Rome, in Düsseldorf and Munich and in Paris by one generation after another of visiting Americans. You came for a season, and sometimes you stayed for a lifetime. The European masters were not standoffish. Your compatriots were glad to take your work home as a superior souvenir of their travels. You could winter in big cities and summer in the countryside and never be out of touch with a superior Bohemia. Many an American artist came to fulfillment in conditions such as those.

The 19th-century American writer in Europe operated as a paradigmate explorer. Before him was a double task. He had to master every inmost recess of an an-cient civilization. But he also had to come to terms with what Europe had to tell him about himself. And the same was true of the visiting American artist. What Henry James' Roderiek Hudson had to do in the novel that bears his name, Thomas Eakins, John Singer Sargent and many another had to do in life.

This is a great subject, and it is being very well tackled by American art historians with respect to the 19th century. But a whole new set of inner awakenings remains to be studied with respect to American visitors to Europe in the 20th century. What was the nature of the European experience? How long did it last at full strength? Did it peter out, only to revive again? Or is it today no more than a picturesque survival to be undertaken at engruous expense for an taken nt enormous expense for an uncertain reward?

No one exhibition could answer all these questions, but a two-part anthology devised by the Wasbburn Gallery has had some fascinating suggestions to offer. Entitled "American Artists Abroad 1900-1950," it has filled both the uptown and downtown Washburn galleries in an atmosphere of se-

The first lesson to be learned, or relearned, is that there are very good painters who drop out of sight. A case in point is that of H. Lyman Sayen (1875-1918). Rarely or never does his work come on the market, and unless you are a regular visitor to what is now the National Museum of American Art in Washington, D.C., which has a large part of his output, you are unlikely to have seen a painting hy him. A pupil in this country of Thomas Anshutz, he was in Paris from 1906 to 19t4 and is said to my run by Matisse.

Those were heady years to be in Paris, and Sayen stands out among the Americans of his day for his ability to take the shock of Paris at full strength and not forfeit his own personality. The painting of his called "171 Boulevard Saint-Germain No. 1" packs a tremendous punch. Sayen's paint is dense hut not clumsy. His color is strong hut not turgid. In his handling of form — whether vegetable or ar-chitectural — be used radical simplifications that never look either perverse or contrived. Those sawedged treetops are like none that we ever saw on the streets of Paris, but their outline ideally sets off the deep-set windows on the other side of the road. This painting proves that Sayen was not only a quick study, hut a deep one.

Sayen was exceptional in that he looked into the cauldron of new Parisian art in the first years of this century in such a way that we still feel the heat of it. Robert Henri, another Anshutz pupil, was 10 years older than Sayen, and on the evidence of the painting dated 1899 in this show he took a more conventional view of the Parisian scene. His subject is the Luxem-bourg Gardens, with two children sailing a boat in the big pond, a superabundance of trees in full leaf, the dome of the Panthéon way up at the back, and just a glimpse of the street scene in be-

It's a classic Parisian subject and Henri gives it a somber dis-tinction of tone. What he himself his notes on the painting called "a heat cloud" turns the Panthéon dome to hronze, and the touches of hright color here and there are or irigin coor nere and there are nicely judged. This is a grand, spa-cious, thoroughly distinguished piece of painting, but it lacks the sense of adventure that was to come a decade later not only to H. Lyman Sayen but to Max Weber and Patrick Henry Bruce, both of whom are well represented in this

The period immediately before 1914 was not, of course, the only time in the 20th century in which American artists prized Paris above all other European cities. Both in the 1920s and again after World War II, Paris nurtured for the paris and the paris nurtured for the paris and the paris nurtured for the paris and the paris Americans who were changed for-ever by their experiences there. As Stuart Davis said, "Everything about the place struck me as being just about right. I had the feeling that this was the best place in the world for the artist to live and work; and at the time it was. There was so much of the past and the immediate present brought together on one plane that nothing seemed left to be desired.

"And," be went on, "there was no feeling of being isolated from America." Both in the 1920s and again after World War II there was a free-form American colony of painters, sculptors, writers and photographers in Paris. What Man Ray, Davis and Berenice Abbott had been to Paris before the Depression, Elisworth Kelly, Sam Francis, Norman Bluhm, Joan Mitchell and others were to Paris in the 1950s. None of them was or is a slave to Parisian attitudes, but Paris tonched them.

Davis is as always the ideal spokesman for Paris in the 1920s. His "Rue Lippe" of 1928 — lent for the occasion by the Andrew Crispo Gallery - has precisely the Astaire-like lightness of touch, the dancing sense of color and the feeling for cameo portraiture that are the mark of Davis in Paris. The portraits in question are not of people, but of the soda siphon, the brand-name carafe, and the invaluable single words ("Hotel" and "Tabac," among them) that served as navigational sids in the Paris of the day. Davis is here the George Gershwin of painting.

After World War II neither the state of art nor the state of Paris were conducive to that kind of light-footed approach. This was a convalescent city. The old carefree handmade life was gone forever. The primacy of Parisian art was already in dispute. To come to terms with Paris, and with oneself, posed a whole new set of problems.

The paintings at the downtown Washburn bear witness to these matters only obliquely, but as an ensemble they bear witness in straightforward and truthful style, to a period of transition. The Kel-ly, the Francis, the Mitchell and the Bluhm in particular now seem to be poised midway between past and present, Paris and New York. They make it more than ever clear that an important book has some day to be written about Americans in Paris after World War II.

The rise in lawbreaking, on a scale unknown in the first half of the century, has been especially disturbing to older people.

The growth in crime became a problem after World War II, when France began to shed its rural character and urbanize. Some French specialists said that crime tends to rise exponentially as cities grow beyond 250,000 people.

Study Indicates Quasars Are At Galaxy Centers

By George Alexander Las Angeles Times Service
LOS ANGELES — A team of California Institute of Technology astronomers has found the first substantive evidence that quasars - extremely bright, mysterious objects scattered throughout the heavens - are located at the centers of star-filled galaxies.

Astronomers have tong believed quasars to be the active nuclei of daxies, but have so far been unable to see elearly a galaxy sur-rounding a quasar. That is because quasars are so far away that they appear through telescopes as little more than pinpoints of intense light. Moreover, their brightness hlots out the light of anything else in their immediate vicinity, although some astronomers have detected small patches of faint, "fuzzy" light around some of them.

Now, using sensitive electronic detectors attached to the 200-inch Palomar Mountain telescope near San Diego, Prof. J. Beverley Oke and a research fellow, Todd A. Boroson, have looked very closely at the faint light surrounding the quasar, which is designated in catalogues as 3C 48, and found the telltale radiation of millions of stars — a galaxy.

Mr. Oke and Mr. Boroson were aided considerably by a computer that subtracted the light of both the quasar and the luminosity of the night sky from the image recorded by the telescope, leaving only the faint light surrounding the

When the two astronomers then did a spectrographic analysis of that fuzzy light, they found that certain wavelengths were missing.

These missing wavelengths, called "absorption lines," were those of hydrogen, calcium and magnesium—all elements found in stars.
"What these lines mean," Prof. Oke said in a telephone interview, "is that there's a lot of gas surrounding [the quasar 3C 48] and something has caused that gas to condense into stars."

Although they cannot make out

Although they cannot make out the exact shape of the galaxy that envelops the quasar, which is five billion light-years away, the pat-tern of the light is very similar to that which astronomers have seen in pinwheel-like spiral galaxies. A light-year is 5.88 trillion miles or 9.4 trillion kilometers. The pattern came as something of a surprise, Prof. Oke said, be cause most astronomers have been inclined to think that quasars would be associated with cigarshaped elliptical galaxies.

Prof. Oke and Mr. Boroson were also surprised by the additional suggestion that the stars in the galaxy surrounding quasar 3C 48 are of the hot, young variety, and not of the cool, older stars that had been hypothesized. If this impression is corroborat-ed, Prof. Oke said, it implies that shock waves coming from the quasar are still triggering bursts of star The new information does not answer the question of what a quasar is. The model most widely accepted by astronomers is that a quasar is a massive "black hole" a the center of a galaxy.

As that matter swirls inward, it secomes so roiled by the black hole's immensely powerful gravita-tional fields that it emits a wide

在我们的时间,我们是一个不是我们的,我们就是对你的情况的。 我们是我们的,我们就是我们的,我们就是我们的,我们就是我们的,我们就是我们的。 我们就是我们的,我们就是我们的,我们就是我们的,我们就是我们的,我们就是我们的。 我们就是我们的,我们就是我们的,我们就是我们的,我们就是我们的,我们就是我们的。

Spain held legal rights to the Islands from January 24, 1600 until February 11, 1811. These rights were never formally disputed by any other nation during that period.

However, in the mid-1700's, "Squatters" from France and England enjoyed brief stays in the Islands. Frenchmen from St. Malo (hence the name "Malouines") settled there between 1764 and 1767; but left as a result of the enforcement of Article 6 of the "Pacto de Familia" between Spain and France.

The British moved into the Islands around 1765, were expelled by the Spaniards in February 1768, returned in 1771, and left again on May 20, 1774. Spain then placed the Islands under the jurisdiction of Buenos Aires.

Between 1774 and 1811, Spain appointed nine successive governors of the Malvinas. On March 18, 1811, the last of these governors, Gerardo Bondas, was instructed by his government to abandon the Islands.

- Argentina became an independent nation in July 1816, taking over the territories formerly ruled by Spain from Buenos Aires.

The Malvinas remained unoccupied until 1820 when the government of Buenos Aires commissioned an American named David Jewitt to take them over. Jewitt had joined the Argentine Navy "to serve the great cause of American independence". He arrived in the Islands commanding the Argentine Frigate "Heroina" on November 2, 1820 and informed the Government of Buenos Aires that he had "taken possession of the Islands in the name of the country to which they belong by natural law."

In 1822 Luis Vernet, an entrepreneur from Hamburg, persuaded the Argentine government to grant him sealing and fishing rights. In 1829 Vernet was appointed Governor.

By 1830, the Malvinas were undisputably a part of Argentina.

1833: By Jingo, We've Done It

On January 2, 1833, the British occupied the Islands by force.

They ordered the Argentines out and forbade them to return. Until April 2, 1982, any Argentine visiting the Islands had to show his return ticket on arrival.

In 1851 the British granted the "Falkland Islands Company" a virtual monopolistic control over the Islands' economy.

This company profited handsomely until recently. Although its fortunes are certainly on the wane, it has always been a stumbling block in the negotiations between Britain and Argentina.

Second Class Citizens

The population of the Island is divided in two categories: The locals - who call themselves "Kelpers" after the seaweed that grows in abundance off-shore—and the British.

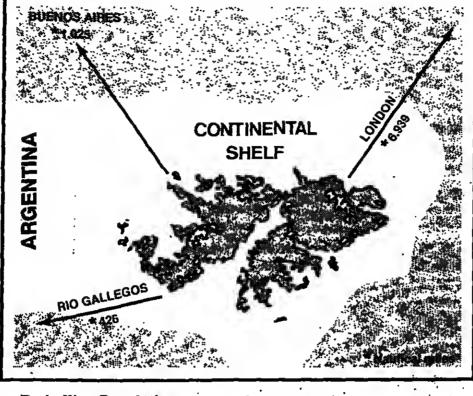

The latter includes governmental officials, high ranking officers of the Falkland Island Co., radio operators, etc.

The "Kelpers" have historically been excluded from the more relevant jobs, are not considered British citizens and are only allowed to visit Great Britain once every two years and for a short period of time

The highest ranking authorities of the Archipelago are appointed directly by London.

The islanders are second class citizens. They have no right of "Abode" in Great Britain unless they are grandchildren of British

Dwindling Population

In 1937 nearly 3,000 people inhabited the Islands. Today less than 1,800 remain.

Many Islanders emigrated when they realized that there was little future left for them under British rule.

Britain has never shown an active interest in the Islands. There are no proper hospitals nor educational facilities. Many children from Malvinas have to attend school in Argentina and Uruguay. Many sick Islanders have been restored to health at hospitals in mainland Argentina.

A British ship arrives at the Islands once every three months.

The only airstrip on the Islands was built by Argentina which has, since 1972, maintained the only regular air service to and from the continent, thus providing the only real link between the Malvinas and the rest of the world.

All the fuel for the islands is supplied by the Argentine Petroleum company.

Argentine teachers have been working on the Islands for nearly ten years.

All of these efforts by Argentina were commended by the United Nations (Resolution 3160 of December 14, 1973).

Give Us—And Them—A Chance

Argentina has not regained the Islands to inflict injury or loss on the local inhabitants, nor to modify their lifestyle.

Argentina does not wish to force anyone to change their citizenship. After all, a community of 17,000 British subjects lives peacefully and has prospered in Argentina.

Argentina is willing to negotiate a special statute for the Islanders that will guarantee their interests and preserve their rights.

Furthermore, Argentina is willing to grant special rights and economic assistance that will create better conditions for the development of the economy and the welfare of the Islanders.

A Colony? — You Decide

Article 73 of the Charter of the United Nations establishes the obligation by member states administering non-autonomous territories to report regularly to the Secretary General on the conditions in these territories.

Complying with this obligation, Great Britain has periodically submitted reports on the Malvinas to the Secretary General, thus recognizing the colonial status of this territory.

On December 20, 1960, resolution 1514 (XV) of the general assembly established the need to put an immediate end to coloni-

As a result of this resolution, a special committee was set up to deal with cases of de-colonization. This committee of 24 members included the Malvinas Islands in the list of territories to be de-colonized.

In 1965, the General Assembly issued resolution 2065 (XX) which declared the Malvinas a colony, acknowledged the dispute between Argentina and Great Britain and urged both governments to initiate negotiations without further delay.

Put It On The Back Burner, Chum

Britain has consistently stalled on the discussions. For the past 17 years almost no progress has been made.

· British negotiators have delayed, procrastinated and refused to take decisions conducive to a reasonable agreement. Always polite, but hardly ever constructive.

By 1975 Argentina was losing its patience. The government recalled its Ambassador from London and asked the British Ambassador in Buenos Aires to leave.

However, two years later, talks were resumed at Argentina's

In 1981, at the United Nations, Argentina warned the United Kingdom that it would not allow the Malvinas to continue as a British Colony and asked for renewed and serious negotiations.

Argentina made a final diplomatic proposal in February of this year. It suggested that a permanent committee be set up to deal with the matter. The United Kingdom did not accept this proposal.

What Happened At Leith

Leith is a tiny settlement on the Island of San Pedro in the South Georgias, a dependancy of the Malvinas. It was once a whaling station. The factory is still there, obsolete and unused for An Argentine entrepreneur by the name of Constantino Davidoff was awarded a formal contract to dismantle the factory and sell it off as scrap. The British government was aware of this contract and requested Mr. Davidoff to furnish a list of the personnel that would be involved in the job. Mr. Davidoff complied with this request.

On arrival, Mr. Davidoff's group of 43 workmen hoisted the Argentine flag, which caused yet another diplomatic point of contention. But the British sent the HMS Endurance to evict the Argentines from the Island.

The Argentine Navy responded by sending the ship "Bahia Paraiso" - a vessel used for supplying its scientific bases in the Antarctic—to prevent the eviction.

On March 30, news from London indicated that the nuclear submarine Superb had left Gibraltar for the Antarctic together with a conventional submarine. London's Independent Television Network program "News at 10" said that, as well as the subs, a Royal Navy tanker was also on its way.

On April 2, Argentina reacted to this impending aggression by occupying the Malvinas, South Georgias and Sandwich Islands. The occupation of the islands was carried out without a single loss of life to the British. The Union Jack was lowered, neatly folded, and returned to the outgoing governor. The British then countered by sending a huge Naval force, including nuclear-powered submarines and two aircraft carriers. They proclaimed a 200-mile war zone around the Islands and threatened to "shoot first" at any Argentine ship found in this zone.

The threat of all out war is therefore the end result of a series of escalating responses to a relatively minor incident in the South Georgias.

After 17 fruitless years of negotiations to gain back what had been unfairly taken from her, Argentina finally decided to reclaim control of the Malvinas. The incident at Leith was simply the straw that broke the camel's back.

28 Million Argentines Recover the Malvinas

The question of the Malvinas has little or nothing to do with whatever government happens to be in power in Argentina.

Not all the Argentines share the same views on politics or on economics, much less on governments, but we all share the same view on the Malvinas. About this there should be no mistake. The Malvinas are a common national cause.

Argentina does not bear a grudge against Britain or its people. There are over 100,000 Argentines of British descent in Argentina. Britain has investments worth billions of dollars in our country. Britain has played a significant role in the making of modern Argentina.

For almost 150 years, the Malvinas issue has embittered the relationship between two nations that have many things in common.

We are a peaceful people. We have not fought a war since the Mid-19th century, but we firmly believe that what is ours, is ours. Sorry.

Lloyd's Severs Argentine Insurance Business From Agency Disputches

LONDON - Lloyd's of London, the international insurance concern. has severed all insurance business with Argentina, a Lloyd's spokesman said Thursday.

David Larner said Lloyd's underwriters quit writing insurance for Argentine firms April 3 when the British government imposed an embargo on trade with Argentina one day after Argentina seized the Falkland Islands: Mr. Larner said the ban applied to renewal of existing policies

In Sydney, chairman Peter Green said Thursday that Lloyd's has advised its members not to take on insurance business with Argentina and, if possible, to cancel all policies held by interests in Argentina.

Chrysler Head Says $150-Million Profit Possible

From Agency Dispatches

WASHINGTON — Chrysler chairman Lee Iacocca said Thursday the company should make a $150-million profit this year if the U.S. economy recovers from the recession in the second half of the year.

In remarks before the House subcommittee on economic stabilization, be said Chrysler had "fulfilled its promises to the nation" and called for the Chrysler Loan Guarantee Board to cut its annual administration fee of $12 million in half.

He pointed to Chrysler's streamlining, fuel economy improvement and other gams made since it obtained $1.7 billion in federal loan guarantees.

Tosco Offers More Security on Shale Oil Plan

New York Times Service WASHINGTON — Tosco, scrambling to avoid a possible cutoff of government support for its multibillion-dollar shale oil project in Colorado, has proposed to the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corp. new arrangements to increase the security for its loans in case the venture fails.

One plan, according to a company source familiar with Tosco's negotiations with the corporation, involves a "bridge" agreement that would supplement the $1.1-billion loan guarantee the company obtained from

It was understood that the fuels corporation sought a commitment that Tosco would pledge to sell its interest in the facility, the Cofony Project, to Exxon if it had difficulty in repaying its debts. Exxon has a 60 percent interest in the project, and Tosco 40 percent. The corporation has scheduled a meeting Monday to consider the project, whose costs have climbed sharply since Tosco sought its loan guarantee.

Rhône Will Seek New U.S. Pharmaceutical Ties

PARIS - Rhône-Poulenc said it will continue its pharmaceutical activities in the United States despite the recent breaking of its links with Morton-Norwich Products.

It said it would pursue this policy through acquisitions and associations with other partners: Rhône-Poulenc is ending its connection with the U.S. firm under an agreement which allows Morton-Norwich to buy back for $135 million the 20.3 percent Morton-Norwich stake owned by

ICI Sees Poor Future, Will Close Some Plants

LONDON - Imperial Chemical Industries chairman John Harvey-Jones told the annual meeting that the plastics and petrochemicals industry needs rationalization and ICI's measures will include portfolio exchanges and closure of inefficient and older plants.

He said Wednesday the past two months have done nothing to change the overall view expressed in February that 1982 got off to a poor start and be said ICI believes economic recovery is likely to be delayed.

Belgium Oil Refinery Denies Sale to Libva

ANTWERP, Belgium - The management of the Albatross oil refinery in Antwerp denied Thursday reports that it had been bought by Libya. It said Libya had no direct or indirect participation in LCF Energie of Zug, Switzerland, which purchased all shares in the refinery from its previous owners, Mahanaft of West Germany. Oil traders in Amsterdam said last Triday Libya was almost certainly behind the purchase of the refinery by a Swiss company in March, Thursday's statement gave no other details about the ownership of LCF Energie.

Japanese Pharmaceutical Firms Will Merge

TOKYO — Kaken Chemical said Thursday that it and Kakenyaku Kako have agreed to merge Oct. 1, with the new company to be called Kaken said it divested Kakenyaku in 1950 as its sales arm and later the two companies expanded their business as independent drug makers.

British Aerospace to Buy Sperry Gyroscope

LONDON — British Acrospace said Thursday it has agreed to purchase for £45 million the assets and business of the Sperry Gyroscope division of Sperry Ltd.

Sperry Ltd. is a subsidiary of Sperry Corp. of the United States. The agreement is conditional on the purchase not being referred to the U.K.

fourth-largest elevator maker in Japan, is moving his company's worldwide headquar-ters to Manhattan.

Mr. Uchiyama is also fond of Ohio. Next month, construction will begin on a $50-million elevator plans in Lebanon, Ohio. When completed at the end of 1984, it will be the largest elevator factory in the world, Mr. Uchiyama said during an interview at the company's offices in this city outside Osaka. At the 140-acre Ohio site, Fujitec plans to make 3,000 elevators and 600 escalators a year; it also plans a 1,000-foot (300-meter) tower for elevator research and development. Although other big Japanese companies have sizable manufacturing sites in the United States, Fujitec is believed to be the first to put its headquarters there.

"In Japan," Mr. Uchiyama said, "people think what we are doing is very strange. But from our viewpoint, it is very natural.

indeed, since its founding in 1948, Fujitec has stood apart from the Japanese business establishment. Mr. Uchiyama is one of Ja-pan's breed of free-wheeling entrepreneurs of the postwar era, a group whose best-known members include Soichiro Honda of Honda Motor, Masaru Ibuka and Akio Mor-ita of Sony, and Isao Nakauchi of Daici, a supermarket chain.

All of them have been unusually aggressive, willing to flout traditional Japanese business practices. They are also more global-minded than their corporate peers.

In the Japanese elevator industry, Fujitee is an outsider in an insider's game. The three largest producers — Mitsuhishi Electric, Hitachi and Toshiba - are old-line companies that are part of powerful industrial groups.

In these circumstances, analysts say, Fu-jitec has done well to take about 10 percent of the $500-million-a-year market for elevators and escalators in Japan, compared with 35 percent for Mitsubishi, 30 percent for Hitachi and 12 percent for Toshiba.

But most of Fujitee's growth has been abroad. In addition, Fujitee has specialized in more sophisticated and costlier elevators — priced from $50,000 to $200,000 apiece that are installed in high-rise buildings. The market for such buildings in Japan is limited by earthquake fears.

IMF Is to Release Credit to Romania

WASHINGTON - The International Monetary Fund has agreed to reopen its credit lines to Romania in a move that could set the stage for the rescheduling of Romania's commercial debt. monetary sources said Thursday.

A day earlier, however, the U.S.

Export-Import Bank acknowledged receiving a $4-million insurance claim from a U.S. bank seeking payment on a loan to Romania. The request from Northern Trust of Chicago was received April 14 by the Ex-Im Bank, which protects U.S. companies selling overseas. It was the first request by a U.S. bank under the Ex-Im Bank a U.S. bank under the Ex-III Bank program since Romania's econom-ic situation deteriorated because of heavy debt to Western banks and other problems.

The accord with the IMF, source es said, would allow Romania to draw on the second-year portion of a three-year, $1.5-billion standby credit. That could release more than $300 million to help Romania pay its foreign debts. The IMF's executive board must approve the accord, the sources said.

The agency last year released some $400 million under the agreement, reached last June, but payments were halted in Novemb when it became apparent that Romania could not meet all the conditions of the loan.

The institution reportedly was insisting on substantial changes in Romania's Soviet-style economy as a condition for more credit.

In March, Romania asked more than 200 Western banks to let it delay payment for up to six and a half years of about $3 billion in debt due this year and last. The country's total debt to Western banks is estimated at $10 billion to $11 billion.

Analysts have said the country's best hope of winning a satisfactory rescheduling of debt payments is a resumption of IMF credit, which Romania could use to finance imports. OPEC Head Offers Aid For Nigeria

ABU DHABI — OPEC's president said Thursday that the cartel will support Nigeria financially in the face of attempts by international oil companies to force it to lower its oil price.

The official, Mana Said al-Otei-ba, also reiterated that OPEC will blacklist companies that try to force Nigeria and Ecuador to reduce their OPEC governed prices, according to the official Emirates news agency. "OPEC strongly sup-ports Nigeria, Ecuador and any other member state facing phaseont warnings from international oil companies," he said.

The companies, some of which have threatened to phase out pur-chases, want Nigeria to bring its oil price into line with that of Britain's North Sea oil, which is of a similar quality but $4.5 a barrel cheaper. The firm makes such sugges-tions as Bob Evans Farms, CFS Continental, Foremost-McKesson, National Convenience Stores, Oshman's Sporting Goods and Rubbermaid in the distribution category. In consumer services, it recommends American District Telegraph, Chemlawn, Purolator and Telepictures.

Two years ago, Mr. Hoffman said, a portfolio of smaller stocks would have concentrated heavily on technology and energy. But popularity on Wall Street often tends to follow price, so sharp declines in these stock groups have served in part to reduce the number of present recommendations.

In Smith Barney's shopping list of growth issues, technology has been cut back to 20 percent of the suggested portfolio. Specific selections are Detector Electronics, Informatics, National Data, TIE-Communications and Stryker. Energy gets only 5 percent of the growth stock pie, the two choices being Tom Brown and Moran En-

Rounding out the buy suggestions are several manufacturing is-sues: Hillenbrand Industries, Joslyn Manufacturing & Supply, Quaker Chemical and Worthington Industries. Manufacturing is accorded 15 percent of the growth portfolio, while the remaining 20 recent rests in cash.

An investor considering a move into growth stocks can hardly be expected to purchase all of these issues. But Mr. Hoffman stressed the importance of a package approach, whereby investments are spread over at least five or six is-

Japan Firms Ask For an End to Ban On Zero Coupons

NEW LOWS-17

TOKYO — Japanese securities firms are urging the Finance Ministry to remove its ban on sales of zero-coupon Eurobonds soon, securities sources said Thursday.

Under guidance from the ministry, the firms have drawn up a plan of self-restraint on such bond sales in Japan, the sources said. The ministry has said the ban, imposed early last month and apparently early last month and apparently designed to stem the flight of capital to overseas investments, will be removed eventually. A zerocoupon bond does not pay interest but is sold at substantially less than face value.

Securities firms also are asking the ministry to allow them to car gage in foreign exchange opera-tions overseas to cover purchases of commercial paper and negoti-able certificates of deposit issued overseas.

The new banking law, which took effect April 1, permits both securities firms and banks to sell such paper in Japan. But securities firms will be seriously handicapped if they are not allowed to engage in foreign exchange operations overseas as Japanese banks are, the sources said.

The Finance Ministry last month issued rules for the sales but it has not yet issued operating licenses because of the weakness of the yen against the U.S. dollar, the

THIS sprightly, and in the end Davidsoo and Lytle bootleg difficult or last that is not at all torians ask and answer questions is difficult or (as historians like to say) meant for that elusive manatee of the bookstore, the general reader, who in liking a bit of salt as well as fresh wa-ter needs to believe that he is coming in grips with the methodology of a discipline without becoming pedantic about asking the right questions in the right way. We all know that the secret to good litigation, to a convincing diplomatic note, and to a happy marriage is knowing both how and when to ask a question that upon examination will have proved to be the "right" one, and Davidson and Lytle have hit the target for which they have aimed. "After the Fact" is a bit more salt than fresh, especially to the professional histori-an, but it should do very well and de-

First, these two young historians, both specialists in the study of the United States, write well, without condescension, and with a nice sense of the high drama inherent in unraveling a mystery. They know, and demon-strate repeatedly, that history is an art rather than a social science, in which accident, inspiration, creative drift, and plain and fancy varieties of serendipity play important roles. They have chosen a series of problems likely to fascinate most readers and at the same time have intelligently contrived to deal with most of the major issues confronting professional scholars. Perhaps most important, they are not afraid to offer their own judgments. and, even more courageously, are willing to confirm conventional opinion when their own examination of the evidence leads them to. In short, the book almost always plays fair with its readers, a characteristic not as common in "popular history" as usually

To be sure, the authors are more honest, and thus more cautious, than honest, and thus more cautious, than the person responsible for the copy on their dust jacket. One ought not to review dust jackets, of course; even though most purchasers probably put out their $19.50 (in this case) with the expectation that they will find answers to such questions as, "Was John Brown mad?" "Was the Hiroshima A-bomb a mistake?" "Was Huey Long an overrated demagnage — or a Long an overrated demagogue — or a true 'great man'?" and such like. Any professional historian, Davidson and Lytle included, knows these questions are not capable of being answered, and in fact they do not ask such ques-

Slow Stalking

What they do ask is, how can the historian best stalk such a question, and in the slow stalking, what germane questions truly capable of an-swers might be raised and solved? Their text is a bit like the good detective covel after which, in one sense, it is named, Frances Iles' "Before the Fact": they reconstruct how earlier generations arrived at agreed cooclusions, show why these cooclusions ought to be challenged, and from time to time offer up their own shrewd (and fresh) guesses. Thus the book it-self is representative of the historian's dilemma: how to convey conclusions sufficiently definite to be satisfying in the reader who is little interested in the integrity of the process of inquiry itself, while maintaining that integrity for those whose primary goal is the testing of the process. Is it the journey or the destination that most satisfies? In balancing the humanistic and scientific sides of history, the authors subtly though clearly, and in my view very rightly, come down on the data-dense. They show what social history is: they apply the methods of oral history; they poke gently into the bramble patch of psychohistory; they take another look at a grand theores. cian like Frederick Jackson Turner, they ask what function footnotes serve and how they may be used to camouflage issues as well as evidence; they inquire into whether model building has any explanatory force in historical analysis; and in an especially appealing essay they show how pictorial representations of groups — in this case the so-called noble savage may distort or overtake the written record.

Still, the salt water is there with the fresh. Not one of these questions is in any way new, though many readers may come to the questions for the first time under Davidson's and Lytle's guidance. On the whole the cooclusions reached are cautions sound, and thus to the artisan as dis-ninct from the apprentice, a little dis-appointing, rather like reading a de-tective novel and fearing all along that the solution suspected at the end of the solution suspected at the end of the first chapter would turn out to be correct despite all hope that a surprise might be in store. Each essay is ac-companied with suggestions for addi-tional reading, and these suggestions strike me as unadventurous and in several instances out-of-date; too often an article that would most con-vincingly support or attack the au-thors conclusions is missing entirely. thors' conclusions is missing entirely, perhaps because they prefer not to cite scholarly journals that might not be easily accessible to the general reader. The result is that despite the honesty of the essays themselves, the supporting scholarly apparatus will mislead first-ome adventurers into assuming that the terrain has been little mapped, when in fact most of it is mapped, fenced, mined and studded with barbed wire at every time.

Even so, I bave only two serious objections to "After the Fact." At imes the authors are captured by their own sense of the high romance involved in solving mysteries, and they attach more significance to a single fact than they ought. Most historians, like most lawyers, believe that evidence should be accumulative, cohesive, art of a be accumulative, cohesive, art of a pattern of logical probability, and it is rare that a historical mystery can truly be solved in the manner of detective fiction, by the discovery of a single red hair on the underside of a blood-stained tea cozy. This tendency to want to remind the reader of a path, that no fact may be overlooked charmage in the contraction of the contr that no fact may be overlooked, can blend into an untruth—that an over-looked fact may be of equal impor-tance to all other facts. The authors fall into this romantic fallacy as abey examine the question of just who Deep Throat was in the context of a generally balanced examination of the Watergate scandal. A ring, a tapping hand, a manipulated footoote, and we find ourselves fed to the conclusion that J. Fred Buzhardt was Deep Throat. This is not a new conclusion; it is not proved, nor is it capable of proof; and that Woodward and Bernstein were writing instant history is not a new indictment.

My second Objection is that the book is devoted exclusively to U.S. examples of the problems examined, and a reader could easily carry away the impression that social history or oral history are best or even exclusively practiced in the United States. One really cannot speak of social history without looking to the French or of oral history without examining the rapid development of African history. The book contributes to an exclusivist, isolationist tendency on the part ist, isolationist tendency on the part of U.S. readers (and too many scholars) to pose questions in purely American terms. There simply is no com-

Still and all, this is a fine book. It shows that history is what historians, broadly viewed, say it is. It makes me feel powerful. I like that.

Gus Williams scored 23 of his 27 points in the second half, and the SuperSonics took command in the third quarter to take a 1-0 lead in their mini-series. Williams, the leading scorer for Seattle during the regular season, came alive in the third quarter after hitting just 1 of 8 from the field in the first half. The teams will play Game 2 Friday night in Houston.

The 76ers can wrap up their se-ries Friday night in Atlanta. A third game, if necessary, will be played Sunday in Philadelphia.

Dawkins, who returned to the lineup last month after suffering a broken leg in January, hit on 12 of 17 shots from the field. He sparked the Philadelphia rout with 10 points in the first quarter as Philadelphia took a 28-20 lead.

"I owe thanks to the Lord for letting me shoot like that." Daw-kins said. "I haven't shot the jumper like that since high school."

Julius Erving scored 12 of his 20 points in the second quarter, but the real story for the 76ers in that period was their defense. Mind Over Blather

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — I'm not exactly crazy about flag-waving, but there are certain things f think every American has a duty to do. This is why every year I set aside three nights to watch the Miss America cootest, the Academy Awards and

A few people sneak off to bed on these nights. They're the kind of people who try to get out of jury duty. People who care about our cououv do their jury duty without whining. The Miss America. the Academy Awards and the Baker Super Bowl. On those nights the whole country gathers in the oa-tional parior to participate in acis f American communion.

I'm there, friend, and I'll bet you are too if you're my kind of people, so I want to ask you. Do you remember who woo the Miss America contest last September? If so, you probably remember who won the Super Bowl last January. I doo't remember either one. Worse than that, I've already forgotten who woo the Academy Awards last month.

I mention this to illustrate the contrary nature of the human mind which keeps it constantly at war with decent human instinct. Consider the battle being waged between these powerful interior forces when the typical patriot tunes in the Academy Awards,

Instinct, seeking communion with the national spirit, settles me into a chair and orders the eyeballs into the staring position. The mind, alarmed by a sudden inter-jection of colored images of extravagantly dressed people sporting $200 hair stylings, pushes the in-

"What's going on down there?" "This is one of the nation's great nights," Typical Patriot replies from the viewiog post. "Instinct has taken over the controls." Miod: "Why are they playing the Super Bowl in those East Side Instinct: "Wake up, you idiot. This isn't the Super Bowl. We watched the Super Bowl two months ago. Have you lost the data on that already?"

times I'm full up. There's no place left up here to store that junk. I'm already stuck for some place to put 137 miles of oew tax-law changes the Republicans sent over."

Jostinct: "You can't refuse. This is the Academy Awards." The mind says something like, "You can lead a mind to Hollywood, but you can't make it think." Then it sets its intake mechanism in fast-disposal mode. I don't think the mind wants to be unpatriouc. I think it's just overworked. You can't treat a mind the way you can an automobile, though I suppose in the not too distant future mind transplants will make it possible to get a new one every three years or 100,000

Even then, though, most people will probably want to stay with their old models. I know I would. My present mind is oo great shakes compared with the new models, but I know its defects and am comfortable with them.

lt's a mind that's not going to give me any nasty surprises. We've reached an accommodation. I don't insist that it regurgitate the Academy Award winner for best movie of 1969, and it doesn't let me down when I ask it how to spell 'accommodation." As sooo as put in the request, it says, "Two c's and two m's. Some of its weaknesses I don't even waste time trying to correct

When it was newer, for example, I was always asking. "How do you spell that word that means to trouble and annoy people"." and sometimes it said, "H-a-r-a-s-s." but just as often it said, "H-a-r-r-a-Now I realize that that's a word it will never be able to spell with certainty, and I don't ask it to

We are often exasperated with each other, but pursuing the policy of live-and-let-live makes our relationship tolerable. f no longer in sist, for instance, that my mind join me in watching the Academy Awards or Super Bowl or Miss America, which make me feel like a good American, and in return the mind oever oeglects to argue me out of the subways at night. which keeps both of us ucking aloog with hopes that things may yet get better.

Polo in the Newport of the South

A Short History of Aikenites, Winter Colonists and Du Ponters

By Gregory Jaynes

New York Times Service IKEN, S.C. — It was a sweet vernal day A down South, a fine afternoon for polo, a sport that to this day is played here by those who can travel intercontinentally with nothing more in their pockets than a ball of lint, such is their station.

Aiken lost, Meadowbrook won, The 100th anniversary celebration had begun.
It is oot the centennial of the sport in America — that would bave been in 1976 but it is the 100th year of polo in Aiken, a little bouquet of a town not far from the Georgia line that since the last century has been called the winter sports capital of the South, even the Newport of the South. In Aiken, the game is played today as it has always been, in the pleasant scent of yellow pine, thought wrongly in another century to possess medicinal properties. The wealthy tubercular patients came here to breathe as well as to look for peace of mind among the azaleas and the dogwoods. The horses perform a furious ballet, some of it so fast it seems like intuition more than blind obedience. The gentlemen in the colors are not above an indelicate word when things go wrong. On the public viewing side of the field, here and there is a beer box, and on the reserved side, now and again a cooler for a magnum of champagne, attended by family retainers. A good time was had by all 1,000 people in the crowd. There will be polo matches bere all week. Seven teams are in a tournament for the America Cup that goes notil May 2. Next Saturday is the centennial ball. Several bundred out-of-towners are present, roughly half from Charleston, the rest from northern

Racing and Trotting

Though a lot of the big-time polo players and sports magnates spend more time in West Palm Beach than they do in Aiken, racing and trotting keep the horse industry here very much alive.

But the story here, it turns out, is not so much a century of hockey on horseback as it is the story of more than a century of Yankee occupation. Aiken came to know polo as the pastime of a Northern aristocracy that favored the word "equestrian" and that only recently began to use the word "egalitarian." Thereby hangs the tale.

South Carolina was the first state to secede from the Union in favor of a confederacy of Southern states. When the war was over, Aik-en was far from flush. Northern millionaires discovered the place in the 1870s, at a time when it could use the bandout. Thomas Hitchcock, a Long Island, N.Y., sportsman, was the first, lured here by his Louisiana bride, Luli Eustis, who had adored playing the game in childhood

The Hitchcocks fired William C. Whitoey's enthusiasm, and the New York banker soon had racing stables here, as well as a mansion at Whisky Road and Easy Street. A flock of bluebloods followed, bringing strings of horses. Others built mansions with more rooms than there are in some towns and called them cottages. There are streets with names like Brandy and Sherry. Cocktail Corner was a popular address for a while.

Polo Comes to Aiken

It was James Gordon Bennett, the sportsman and publisher, who brought polo to America from England in 1876. The British cavalry had carried polo to England in 1869 from the Punjab. Persia bad amused itself with the original sport 4,000 years before. Col. C.S. Wallace, a New Yorker with the Havemeyer Sugar Co., brought the rules, the cane mallets and the willow root balls to Aiken in 1882; the horses were already here.

The sport caught on quickly, in part be-cause Mrs. Hitchcock was an enthusiastic convert. "Boys at the age of 16 or 17 are getting to the age where they are keen for a certain amount of excitement," she wrote in the early part of this century. "They are at the time when they might begin to smoke or drink. They are at the time when they like to dance, and keep long hours. Boys at this age must have something to interest them. Let them play polo."

Whitney built the first polo field, Whitney Field, the field upon which the first centennial game was played on Sunday.
Out of Aiken and on to U.S. polo teams came the great Thomas Hitchcock Jr., known the polo world over as Tommy; Seymour Knox and his sons Seymour and Northrup; G.H. (Pete) Bostwick; Devereaux Milburn F. Skiddy von Stade Sr.; Alan Corey Jr.; Conrad Ruckelshaus, and William Post.

Out of a cotton field bound for the market in the late 1920s came Ira Ellis Coward, a dozen dead quail in his hands. On the road he ran into a man oamed Pinkerton, of the "We Never Sleep" Pinkerton Detective Agency, who was impressed with the young wing shot and hired him on the spot. Coward died in 1959, having spent the rest of his life as manager of winter estates and race horse training tracks. It happened that way for a thousand or more old Aikenites, as they called themselves; a brush with one of the "winter colonists," as the townspeople call the rich, and pretty soon they were in their employ. For many, some resentful feelings clung. Tradesmen sold their services to the wealthy at higher prices than they charged others.

In a 1973 essay entitled "Horses Don't Eat
Moon Pies," Pat Conroy observed of the old en, they were suckled on the mystique of the winter colony, and their first pablum was the recognition that their town harbored kings and queens too grand to associate with mere

Conroy went oo to note that the old Aikenites developed a bunger "to be made wor-thy before the horse people" and that this resulted in a "social schizophrenia: The old Aikenite feels inferior to the winter colony, but by God he feels superior to every other bastard that comes into town."

The oatives' feeling of superiority sourced in 1952, when the Atomic Energy Commis-sioo opened the Savannah River plant just a few miles down the road. "Du Ponters, old Aikenites immediately tagged the 7,000 or so families whose livings are ned to the ouclear facility, after E.l. du Poot de Nemours & Co., which contracts much of the work from the government. For years, the Du Ponters were accepted by neither the old Aikenites nor the winter colonists.

"This was a real cultural shock for these people," City Manager Roland Windham recalled recently. "The oewcomers wanted to take a leadership part in my church activities and my municipal government activities. There was a natural resentment. "I thought Aiken was finished," Seymour

Knox of the winter colooy remembered. "I Was wrong

"We all thought they were going to pave the roads," said Betty Post. A little over four miles of streets, in the very heart of Aiken, remain unpaved. This is to accommodate the thoroughbreds. When the Du Ponters came in in the early 1950s and doubled the population of the town, to 15,000, traffic lights with elevated switches were put up so riders could cross safely.

Softening Attitude

Over the years the attitude finally softened somewhat toward the Du Ponters and those from other companies who came after them. "A Du Ponter from South Carolina or

North Carolina is all right," said an old Aik-enite, "but we can't stand those Du Ponters from Delaware."

"They are a very nice caliber of people," said Joan Tower, former wife of Whitney Tower, great-grandson of William C. Whitney and great-grandson of Cornelius Vander-bilt, "Well educated, well paid."

Mrs. Tower remarked, too, that the old so-cial "line of demarcation" was crumbling and that now and again one will see old Aikenites, winter colonists and Du Ponters at the same social gathering. Polo, nooetheless, is oot known as an egalitarian sport, and it is polo that is being cele-brated in Alken all this week. A good polo pony costs $10,000, and a good player uses four or more on a Sunday afternoon, and It is the cost that elevates the sport beyond the reach of the stickball players. The blacksmith in Aiken, for example,

PEOPLE: Bailey Wins Count I tous In Drunk Driving Case Bailey Wins Own Trial

F. Lee Bailey, the criminal lawyer, was cleared of drunken-driving charges by a municipal court jury which said be was only guilty of running a stop sign. Bailey was acquitted after 7½ hours of deliberation after a two-week trial, one of the longest drunken driving cases in San Francisco history. Bailey, whose defense could cost $100,000, said that he was considering whether to file a complaint with the city against officer Peter Canaan, who arrested him, and who, he asserted, abused and battered him the night of the arrest. Bailey had pleaded not guilty to the charges of drunken driving and running the stop sign and said he refused to take an alcohol breath test because he was mistreated by the motorcycle offi-

In September, the former president has an-nounced, he will make periodic forays from his study in Plains, Ga., to serve as a visiting professor at Emory University in Atlanta, cooducting seminars and lecturing on government and international affairs. . . On his first trip to California since he moved East rwo years ago, former President Richard M. Nixon was greeted with a standing ovation as he entered the main dining room of the Disneyland Hotel in Anaheim, Calif., to address a $150-a-plate Republican fundraising dinner. The orchestra struck up "Hail To The Chief," and the crowd of more than 700 thundered its applause as the former chief executive strode to the dinner stage arm-in-arm with two women party officials. Before the dinner Nixon was guest of hooor at a private $1,000-a-cou-ple cocktail and picture-taking party attended by about 200 peo-ple in another part of the hotel, at the Disneyland amusement park.
